I feel like you could play up the flirting scene a lot more. The facial reactions made it feel really awkward. Intro is expertly done! Both of you need to work on the reactions when you aren't the one speaking. They are just as important! The blocking is very clean! Love the build up in emotion! Absolutely love this speech! Speaking in sync works incredibly well! I can easily tell which scenes are your favorites. You put more effort into some than others. You need to be at 100% the entire time. The main reason for ranking you 2nd is I found the other duo playing off each other much much better. You two are incredible though. I honestly see you two becoming state champions if you could just learn to keep your effort consistently high and work on your reactions.

Anna:

Not sure what you both were dropping during putt-putt. The anxiety shown through the body movements are strong. The emotions displayed through your speech are really strong.

Rob: Talking while eating is not the strongest. Opening was very strong, however. The emotions are there, but could be displayed a bit more. Couldn't understand/hear the voice of anxiety/depression at two different times. I want more of that want to really help Anna

The movement together is really good. Especially during "argument"

RFD: 827 received the 5 due to the motions not being as swift and smooth as other DUOs and the characters were not as well developed. You guys still did a great job. Good luck!

You channel the sweetness of a little girl with your voice, facial expressions, enthusiasm and movement around the room very well. You are very polished in using your entire body to express your character. This is not under your control, but this piece takes awhile to get to the actual topic of the piece, (jellyfish to heartbeats to a funeral took almost 2 minutes) so I felt lost. I would say try to shorten that so that you get to the meat of the story more quickly. However, your performance is very strong, you really bring it at the mention of friends death and through funeral scene. Your eyes are very intensely conveying your shock. Good wrap up conclusion with heartbeats. Rank because others had more engaging openings.

I gave you this ranking because:

Make sure that you are actually making eye contact with your audience and not focusing on the wall behind you. *This did improve significantly the further you progressed into the piece.

Good job with facial expressions/body language. Watch that some of them do not get over exaggerated. Did note that it got better as you continued.

Voice is very clear and easily understood. You did very well with intonation/inflection/volume changes.

Try over exaggerating the portion when you start talking about being 5 and excited/happy- more smiling (even with your eyes); it feels almost strained.

Enjoyed the piece. You did well connecting to the piece.

Competitor 641 performed "Stranger than Fiction" and placed 3rd in the round because Had better character differentiation and vocal variety than others in the round, but the top in the round had more polished physical humor (including facial expressions).

Comments:

Fist @ 10 (don't need to "if i get there)

I like how you bring in a lot of physical elements. Unfortunately some of the facial expressions get covered by your hair when you are performing those.

There's a spot in your intro where I'm not sure what you're doing with your hands.

Strong vocal presence and volume - across characters. Although, feels like it's harder to project the "golem-like" voice. This particular type of voice can be effective, but can also be difficult to maintain when you are adding in changes in pace and volume (which happened here, wasn't as consistent as your other characters)

Super sharp transitions/pops between characters.

Your sound effects feel effortless and well integrated into the piece. Not cheesy or forced. Well done.

posture between characters is different, but not much difference in facial expressions.

Also, as a double-entered student, make sure not to do anything that may be distracting when you enter the room. The interaction with one of the other competitors was not appropriate in the middle of a round. This had no impact on your placement, but some judges take in-room etiquette as one of their criteria for judging. I tell my students that the performance starts when you walk in the room, and ends when you exit.

The answer was clear and directly related to the question. But the full speech was more structured as China vs US rather than US influence on Latin America, which is the key question. The intro and drawing parallel between the NBA game and the question was a good idea, but somehow it did not connect very well. The first and second points of the speech had good structure and were well developed. The third point was rushed and did not adequately back up the claim.

If you mess up on dates, most likely your judge will not know. I can tell you are nervous, confidence, even if you fake it, is the most important part of delivering a speech. Good vocal and stance differentiation between characters. Very satisfying to hear the "thwip" of your shoes. Best thwip of the round.

I understand that this cut is from a movie but I haven't seen it. So you are creating all the context for me.

I don't understand some of the gestures - like "don't ask me" and you make what looks like a sign of the cross? Trying to repel a question like a vampire? There's something not coming across there fully.

When Fletcher talks to himself, you're making eye contact with a defined point which makes it feel like Fletcher is actually talking to someone. Is he talking to himself in a mirror?

The kid character falls short of being cute. I think it might evoke more sympathy from your audience if the kid is cuter.

When Fletcher gets down to talk to Max, you have to make eye contact with your imaginary kid through a curtain of bangs, and that might be detracting from it somewhat.

Reason for rank is

characterization falls a bit short as the kid character does not come across as kid-like

You have great voices! Your physicality added to the characters and you were able to differentiate between the characters with voices/motions well. Some of your voices were a bit more like Muppets (like the teacher's voice) or something you might hear from Avenue Q. You might want to look at making some of your voices more believable - at least from your main characters. This will help provide a good comedic juxtaposition. Some of the most hilarious pieces have both a more dramatic, authentic character balanced with comedic, character roles. This was a hilarious piece! Well done!
