Your contentions are well supported with evidence and the context that you add with popularity polls is a nice touch. The source you have proving that the pay incentive will actually change the actions of congress is incredibly crucial and I feel that a majority of the debate around the negation will center on that topic. Love the whiplash intro, well done. I do worry that it is not super relevant to the topic, so make sure that the link is clear. The intro was also delivered very dramatically which could be cool, but maybe consider delivering it in slightly different ways.

Your contentions are well supported evidence and I like the impacts that you expand upon with the dramatic speaking throughout the speech. You do suffer from a good deal of rehash and this late into the round you absolutely need to have plenty of clash to mitigate the negative impact that this has on your arguments. I would have liked the lack of EMTs point would have been explained as an impact a little better, I understand that there aren't enough of them, but what does that DO to our constituents and why should they care?

You often get critiqued for being too angry, and this is a rare example where being so angry is okay; however, just because this is excusable does not mean that more emotion is bad, as a matter of fact having those tonal lows that I still think you are missing would be more effective than as you are. Let your voice soften and have a quiet moment, then build back up to the intensity of your contentions.

Nice job in questioning.
