You maintain eye contact really well. Because of this strength, any time you search your memory it is clear because you look away. You do a good job with movement-both large motor (moving throughout the room) and small (hand movement). Your references were strong as well. What was lacking for me was warmth. How can you take such a dry topic (depending on your audience's interest of course) and interest/connect to a wider audience?

The more you practice and perform, the stronger you will get! It was evident that you are still working on outlining your speech. You have excellent eye contact and you have a factual, objective tone. You have strong professionalism. You started your speech with a strong intro and your beginning blocking helped you to make your points. You tried to incorporate quotes and dates (i.e. Washington Post). You matched a source with each point. Well done! I am impressed with the factual information you incorporated. You presented a speech with a clear organizational pattern that was easy to follow. There were times when you seemed to hesitate with the delivery of your points. Again, as you practice, you will get smoother with your delivery. At one time you seemed to ask a question to yourself. I think this was just your way of processing and thinking while you were speaking. Your conclusion was clear and organized but ended rather abruptly. Overall, your speech was well thought out and clear! I see you going far in this category!

Speaker recovered well and gains confidence. Speaker keeps excellent eye contact. Identifies three points clearly and concisely. Used current information. May want to supply the source for the 2.7 percent gain of the average american in second contention. Though speaker forgot his third contention, it appeared as if he knew the content. Speaker did address the judge effectively and may benefit from incorporating more body and hand movement to have the body language emphasis key points.

Rob/Anna

-You both have great voices, volume, tone.

-There were several movements were I was not sure exactly what you were doing at first.

-Good unison and movements - with practice you will be even more synchronized.

-Rob - one spot sounded more like you were reading it than performing.

-Great emotion.

Good transition to and from intro

Used the room to your benefit

I really liked the story--easy to follow and very relatable

The emotions were so good--made me really feel it

I think some of the facials need worked on especially from the guy character-- sometimes seemed forced

Great Job

Great into establishing the representation of panic and depression. Very good at developing the relationship over the course of the performance. Very charming performance. Great representation of depression, even in the minutia (foot tapping). I love the echoing of depression.

I would love to see more intentional reactions from Rob like when Anna and Rob were having the blow up fight. Overall, excellent!

I was very captured by the beginning.

Your are incredibly talented.

Your facial expressions are amazing

While your character is. Incredibly well developed, I would love for you to be a LITTLE bit more real, casual, and present. I think the energy and distinct character traits are seriously wonderful. But they also sort of take away from your actual words.

Careful not to swallow the end of your sentences. Allow each thing to settle within the audience.

I think you should be a little more light hearted with "cracks and flaws" almost joking. And then when you say it again you are actually considering the meaning.

The screaming was a bit hard to understand. i think a numbness would potentially be more effective.

I really can't understand all of your words when you're screaming. i think you need to build and build and build and then... quiet. Doors of the church.

12 years old forever </3

Good ending. Thank you.

So much potential, great work.

- The heart fact was so spooky yet so fascinating
- Try to bring in more energy into the piece feels like you were really flat in the beginning
- Try to speak more loudly and with more confidence
- I really like the pool part of your story because it connects to real life where you meet that one person and you just connect and both follow each other into life
- Couldn't really feel your emotion at first when you got to the panicking about Frannie part, your voice got louder but your face stayed the same until the last few seconds of the scene
- When you got to the part about getting hurt about thinking about the church it was really hard to understand you your words fumbled into each other and all that could be heard was screaming rather than screaming words
- I really like how you connected the statistics you brought into the beginning to frannies death, that was creative

-nice job coming back from the mental block at the beginning

-Your English female character could use more characterization. Her accent could be bigger or her body language. Either way, she needs to have a little more personality

-your vocals are solid (tick tick tick,, opening of cabinets, knocking, etc.)

-when he has the brownie in his mouth and then talks about how good they are, talk as though the brownies are still in your mouth. It will make it more realistic

-define the movements in your flashback scene a bit more. It's a good part of your piece, just make it more defined

Overall, I would focus a little more on adding some small details to your characters. This will help push you into the top spots.

Good volume, pops are very good, sound effects are very good. Voices are good and differentiate the characters well. You sway back and forth during your intro. Good comedic timing. Stances are good. Play more with the lines that aren't jokes. Try and make humor where it isn't explicitly written. Like something elaborate when the writer is playing with the cars and thinking of the traffic accidents. Can there be more pauses and slower moments, like when the writer is asked not to kill Harold, can they pause and make a funny face considering it them go, "oh".

Great gestures and movement. His voice carried well and the rate of his speaking was well controlled. He maintained eye contact during the entire piece. His sound effects contributed nicely to the piece. The characters were clearly defined. His expressions and emotions were conveyed well. His movements clearly defined the characters. His performance took me to the time and place of his story. Sources clearly cited. He transitioned from one character to the next wonderfully. He was professional and well prepared. He flowed from one line to the next wonderfully. He clearly and passionately conveyed emotions.

Vocals were pretty good. Volume was excellent. Tone was decent, but a bit monotonous at times. Once you are off script, that should get better. Rate was way too fast. It caused stumbles.

You had no hand gestures because you were reading your note cards. Same with facial features.

When you have your piece memorized, you will be able to work on eye contact, body language, and strengthen your facial expressions.

Took until you moved through your speech that I felt like you had more of a connection to it- made it sound like it was not your own words.

Don't rush! Strategic pauses will help.

Strong start, I was drawn in immediately. Great eye contact.

You rush through some parts making it a little hard to understand.

You spoke clearly and varied volume and pitch well.

Showed differing emotions well but could have made some of them much bigger. The sad parts were very well done, but your other emotions can be bigger.

You used your space well. I was drawn into the space and felt transported.

As a single mom who has faced the choice your character did, I was so moved by your piece. You were so believable as the mother. It was a beautiful job.

- Your projection, emphasis on words, and emotion right away caught my attention! Way to command a room!
- I think the way you made your visual aid into a song record is super cool! It helps to connect the aids to your speech, aside from just using them as props.
- Take your time! I know it can be scary and (especially this early in the season) it is okay to take a breath and gather your thoughts. As you move forward, I would suggest practicing the middle sections more, just so that you feel more confident and don't second guess yourself.
- When you make jokes, I want to see you EMPHASIZE it is a joke! This goes for song titles and comments you make along the way. It won't read to the audience unless you play it to be funny!
- Hand movements are natural; just make sure that they are all for a purpose, that way it doesn't get distracting or repetitive.
- Going off of what I said earlier, watch out for an excess of "um"... I know it is a nerves thing, but you got this! Own it!
- Overall, great job! It is a wonderful thing to be able to stand up in a room of your peers and speak about a topic you are passionate about. The aspects I want you to focus on for next week are slowing down, solidifying your memorization, and purposeful hand movements. These will elevate your performance and make you feel more secure!

Watch eye contact- engage with audience and not behind them.

Good change of characters. Easy to follow and understand.

Work on more facial expression- will help better emphasize performance and bring the audience right with you to feel the emotions.

Areas that could use more emphatic intent followed by reducing volume; you did well with quieting areas that the father was saying, but could have been more dramatic prior to.

Body language was good.

Love intro and use of voice

The sharp movement in between changes of character gives a nice creak and separation, also the distinct voices are great

Great break into where you introduce the works, just slow down when talking

You're using the strategy of looking at the wall behind us, which is fine, but make a little more eye contact with the crowd

Your voices, movements, tone, cadence, and acting overall are fantastic, just make some eye contact

"A Nice Family Gathering"

- I LOVE the dad's voice! I think when you say "oh...HEY...dad.." you should really emphasize the awkwardness and play on how funny it is that it is your dad! The audience will really like the stretched outwardness of it.
- Maybe instead of picking up your foot on the line "wrong foot," you can balance on just that foot? Play around with alternatives for that line, just because I'm not sure if future audiences will find that as funny as it could be.
- The delivery of "I don't know how the channel" was perfect
- Carl was funny!! Probably my favorite character honestly
- I think after the dad says "I hope to die..again..." could be emphasized a little more! Before you say again maybe laugh or look around, and then shrug while you say again? Not totally sure, but see what you can do.
- You really are a funny guy. I think for the upcoming weeks, I would suggest taking some time to consider more comedic emphasis you can put in certain places because it will elevate your piece as a whole. I enjoyed watching your performance, and I look forward to seeing you later this season. Good luck :)
