AG: good context to what a recession is

Q: Are we falling into a recession?

A: yes

1. high borrowing costs

2. unemployment

3. pandemic

I) investopedia, what are these costs? I liked how you brought that up, but give the statistics

II) nyt, 15 million americans are unemployed, great statistics in this contention

III) wp, good job giving the timeline of the recession, that's information people don't really know without researching the economy.

Conclusion: good summary of your contentions!

3 sources

Comments: just calm down, don't tell me you've only been doing extemp for one week! Try and stand still when you are speaking, as it was a little distracting! You had great information, just elaborate more and add some more sources! Great job and good luck this season!

Great engagement with the audience. Good use of evidence with dates to show the relevance. Use movement but don't move the entire time. Try to use your movement to separate the different points to make it more effective in your piece. Keep working at this, you had great information but had some trouble retrieving it at points. You have plenty of time and can slow down to help with retrieving the information. You received a rating of 2 because although your information was good you had plenty of time to come back and wrap up your points.

Competitor 167 spoke on "Will Vivek win the Presidential Candidacy" and placed 3rd in the round because while struggled to project confidence in presentation, followed a logical flow and clearly answered the question.

Comments:

Clear statement of the question and answer.

Aimless wandering rather than purposeful movement.

Limited Eye contact and spent a lot of time looking at floor.

1) Climate Change Stance: Washington Post, quote. Misrepresenting stance that climate change agenda is a hoax, for a belief that climate change itself was a hoax. Poor argument.

2) Lacks solid foundation of support. NPR. Good argument

3) people just don't like him. Cincinnatti.com as source, but just as proof that he was from there, not that people don't like him. Said that he gave fake statistics without supporting claim.

Cross Ex:

Handled questions reasonably well. And answered with decent logic to the questions.

Very strong start. First scene of the depression telling her the relationship isn't working had very cool blocking. It needs a little bit of polish on timing.

More facials in the section when she initially tells him that she has depression. The depression character needs a different voice than Rob. This is a very powerful speech that could mean a lot to a lot of people. I think if the relationship between the characters felt stronger, the emotion of the end would be more powerful. Overall well done.

The representation of depression was really cool! When you are playing golf, you should make a noise when the club hit the golf ball, I think that would be cool! When you are portraying depression, make sure the movements are at the same time because the timing was a little off. Sometimes Anna's hand gestures are a little distracting. This is a very emotional piece, you did a great job portraying these heavy emotions!

Reason for rank: best in round!

Excellent facial expressions to help convey emotions.

Balanced portrayal.

Good tone and diction variation.

Very poised and confident.

Good execution.

Clear enunciation.

Consistent portrayal of characters.

Good physical transitions to help distinguish characters.

Fluid presentation- good cadence.

Decent variation of voice characteristics to help delineate characters, but a little more variation would have helped.

Very good dramatic portrayal.

Physical movements helped with the emotional portrayals.

I enjoy the portions where you've chosen to cut each other off when you're delivering lines- it's a good way to show more natural deliveries like conversations happen in real life.

Some dialogue seems a little bit stiff

Good blocking choices with one person standing behind the other for the cruel inner monologue

"I'm always pretending like everything is fine" is SO good.

I would like either a bigger or smaller "you matter to me." Either be angrier or sadder but a stronger emotion there would be really effective.

You could incorporate more movement into the speech. Right now it's a lot of two people standing and talking to each other, not much else. Good transitions, quite clean for this early into the season! However, I'd really like to see more action and REaction from you guys. When one of you says a line, try to really imagine that you're in the moment and BE your character. Good work really "being" in the space that you're in: using objects like drink glasses. Nice job on the ending at the breakdown, very well blocked and acted.

Congrats on making it to the final round! This was a tough one! You did great! Keep up the good work!

good volume solid rhythm
powerful use of pauses
good movement (especially in heels!)

sometimes speaking a bit quickly, when it is necessary to speak quicker for purposes of rhythm, it helps to enunciate more, hit the consonants harder. Really hit those consonants.

I really love how strong you communicate the emotion of fear, anxiety, anger, desperation, all into in your non-verbal communication as well.

Very engaging opening.

Make sure your transition to your introduction is very deliberate and clear. Take a moment to pause before allowing your arms to drop and beginning the intro.

Some shifts in emotions are a bit too drastic. Every emotion needs to feel earned/built up to.

Your emotions during the reveal of Franny's death did not seem very natural. Work on developing the believability of your portrayal.

- Strong intro
- I like the beating heart blocking at the beginning
- Your blocking is generally really good
- You also have excellent facial expressions too
- You are a strong and clear speaker, maybe you could ease on the sadness. Give your speech so happy and light hearted moments so that the hard parts really pop!
- You did a really good job highlighting anxiety with imagining the shark tank breaking
- The moment leading up to the "Standing in that doorway at the church" was a little rushed. I feel like it could have been built up a little bit more. You could have added a fake heartbeat too when you learned that she drowned to allude back to the beginning.
- The ending was dragged out a little much. Maybe just risk it and don't ask for time signals. You were on time anyway.

You have a strong stage presence and are a poised and confident speaker. When you are able to go off script you will (I predict) be a top competitor! Sustained eye contact (which will happen when you are off script) will make your speech very powerful. Think about who your character is and how you communicate that to me. Consider varying your tone and volume more, create some moments of vulnerability in the speech. Can you use physical movement and gestures to further develop your character? You have a compelling voice that will lead to even stronger performances as the season progresses!

- Great energy in your speech
- Nice steady tempo/pacing
- Nice volume and vocal inflection--well done.

- The facial expressions you use are good--you can do even more with them.
- When you are free of your notes you will be able to do more with your gestures--this is coming along well, but again will improve as you go through the speech and debate season.

Thank you for your good work on your speech.

You might play with even more distinction in your narrator's voice. It was good, and you might dial it up even further. Try out an even more distinct voice. The energy of your characters is fun to watch. You could also experiment with moving away from just the center of the space. I appreciate your quick transitions, and you could explore adding a second pause between dialog to help us follow the conversations.

In your teaser you introduce us to Harold. And then we meet the writer, Karen Eifel, and the assistant. You differentiate your characters well, especially Harold as we move back into the inside story. Your transition device helps us see each change without intruding in either story.

What an interesting turn when Harold Crick knocks on the door of Karen Eifel. And then you go backwards to a marvelous conclusion. You have chosen a great piece, but the problem is that it is not inherently funny. I think this makes a better DI than and HI. Either way though, you are a talented performer.

WOW! Your voice is really strong and powerful, but it's also very clear and easy-to-understand. A very important duo!

You did a great job speaking clearly and enunciating when you did different voices, too. All the voices were very engaging.

'80% of people who identify as lesbian, gay, bisexual...hide their identity from the people in the lives. So what's a better way to pretend to be someone else...' I don't remember the line exactly, but it is really smart and well-written. It immediately and powerfully explained the important connection between queerness and storytelling, D&D and finding our chosen-family through stories.

Oh wow. Oh man, the emotion when Agnes find out is so really and raw. Well done. 'I'm done talking to ghosts.' I just wanted to cry.

And the lines 'I shouldn't have to find out about you through a role-playing game.' Are smart to include because it keeps the program grounded in the D&D topic and of course relates to the larger topic of queerness.

'But the story remains' STOP I DON'T WANNA CRY BEFORE 10 AM ON A SATURDAY.

The ending is very strong, but it may help to slow it down a little and add some more dramatic pauses. Just to play it up a little more and make it even more satisfying.

This was a very moving piece. My only suggestion is to maybe play up the idea of chosen-family more? I'm not sure, I'm nit picking because it was a very powerful, well-composed piece. Maybe as you continue through the season, and you're wanting to refresh your piece, you can consider that 'chosen-family' topic more that's so important to us in the community.

Keep up the STELLAR work!

Snaps and transitions are very clean. A lot of the piece is just two people talking, then at certain points there's cool blocking. It's important to find the balance between these so that the whole piece is impressive technically. The switch between the two stories is good, it adds layers to the meaning of the story. It's extremely important that you absolutely NAIL the emotion in this story. If you fall even a little short of REALLY feeling what the characters will feel, it doesn't do the piece justice. The scars/courtroom scene is very powerful. Make sure that you take your time and REALLY hit the emotion in that scene. It's right at the climax of the story. Overall great job! VOCAL QUALITY: You have only one level to your voice. You need to change your rate, inflection, and volume to help give the words expression and more meaning.

PHYSICAL PRESENTATION: You look up, but you want to engage and hold eye contact with your audience. You must do more than just look forward. Use movement to help emphasize points. You stood locked into one place.

INTERPRETATION: When you lose your words, don't show it; avoid the sigh and head scratch. You're missing the opportunity to get laughs. You have several humorous points, but without the proper delivery, then your audience misses it. This is linked to your vocal qualities. Pause between transitions. Keep working; I think you've selected a timely and well-written piece. Make it yours!

PROFESSIONALISM: You appearance if professional. Keep working to exude poise and confidence. I think when you are able to move off script, then it will help your confidence. Be sure to look at other competitors to help them maintain eye contact.

Thank you for using good general volume.

I would like to hear improved enunciation.

I enjoyed your use of arm/hand blocking. I would like to see improved overall blocking that is more natural and fluid.

Variations in pacing, volume, facial expressions, and posturing will help to better convey your speech.

stumble at about 1:00

monotone. work on this stumble @ "NY tribune editor"

staying in one place too much. use the room stumble at "caught up in life"

closed your eyes anytime you were overthinking where you were in the speech i think once you get memorized this will solve a lot of your issues.

slow down some. you went faster as you were reading.
