What you are doing is so difficult, and I can tell how smart you are. You will get better at the process of researching, writing, and memorizing over time, however, for now I feel so much of your energy is put on memory. This is understandable but it takes cognitive energy away from engaging your audience. Consider how you can use your intro to draw your listeners in and, while speaking, slow down! You were so focused on getting all of your knowledge out that you weren't able to draw me in and garner my interest. This can be done with your movement throughout the room, hand movement, and engaging anecdotes. You have to walk a fine balance between knowledge and engagement-both are important. I find myself comparing today to last week, and I thought you did better last week. Reflect on yourself why this could be to help you improve-personal issues, lack of sleep, tough question. Any of these can be things to consider.

Came in and was confident, good voice volume, could do some more voice up and down in volume depending on what you are trying to say. Try not to use "um" as much and when doing your citation and the time might slip, say it with confidence and like you know it without issue. Good apparent knowledge on the question and subject. Keep learning and growing.

Great eye contact and engagement of the room. Used vocal variety for the characters, but as the characters got louder all the characters sounds similar which caused some confusion, work on maintaining the same voice even as it may become louder. Great physicality of the different characters and also enjoyed the sound effects created by this speaker.

Hi Lauren and Penelope,

I LOVE the blocking right from the start!! You are both amazing and completely embodied your characters, down to the facial expressions and mannerisms. I didn't want to write any notes or look away for a second. Keep perfecting this piece!!

Lauren and Penelope---your trigger warning prior to beginning is so appreciated and appropriate.

Your connection to each other and fluid transitions are strong and believable. The "shark" voice which is performed in tandem is perfection. Your in sync breathing adds a level of drawing your audience in. Since this is element/scene is so impactful, continue to practice this.

The Ohio Alliance to End Sexual Violence and NIH are great references and create a level of credibility to your research.

Your movements/swimming portrayal in Short Term 12 are appropriate and do not distract from your presentation. The transitions between characters is so strong and your emotions are tangible. You are both wildly talented and have the potential to be "in the wings" at every competition. Whatever you are doing, carry on. I have complete faith we will see you in the State of Ohio tournament. Wow.

You work together well.

The blocking is very good.

Watch our volume. When the scene requires you to be tender. Your volume drops quite a bit.

The end speech is very good.

This team did a great job using their bodies to create dynamic scenes. They were very in sync with one another. Their characters were very consistent and they portrayed a good range of emotions.

Her story was powerful. She made the judge feel like she was actually in a hospital having a sonogram and told the great story of Debbie from the birth control clinic who gave her dirty stares. She showed a huge range of emotion, including shock, happiness, sadness, depression, defeat, melancholy, acceptance, and laughter. She had a story of meeting the potential gay married couple and being sandwiched between them. When she pretended to hold her baby and cry, it felt raw and real as if she was really holding a baby. It really tugged at my heart strings and I noticed the other students trying to keep their emotions in check. She had good movement and good gestures: reading a book, talking on the phone, putting a baby in a car seat, and walking into clinic. She had great dramatic pauses. Her pace was good and eye contact was consistent. Her tone was loud at the right times and soft at the right times. Excellent job!
