Great beginning to your piece. It was very engaging and it drew in the audience.

You had a wonderful mixture of serious and funny moments sprinkled throughout your piece.

Good transition into the breakout.

I really enjoyed your breakout and how you tied it into your own personal story and included interesting facts and statistics.

You have a strong voice for DEC. Good use of vocal inflections and with changing your voice appropriately with each emotion that is being displayed throughout the speech.

Good use of hand gestures and movement in general.

You did a great job with playing up the jokes throughout your piece. It really made your piece very interesting and entertaining to watch.

Good job including the audience with eye contact.

Wonderful job!

Be cautious not to flop your arms to the side/just leave them hanging there

^Also really watch the swaying, you did it during the entire speech

You stay at a loud volume the entire time, having a powerful and impactful voice is important but doesn't mean that you have to yell to accomplish it.

- You tend to kind of sway back and forth as you speak. This makes you seem nervous and not confident
- You also stand in one place for a lot of your speech. You have a lot of space in the room to use, so try to use it by walking around the room a little bit
- Your hand gestures are also a little repetitive, so try to shake it up just a little bit
- I like your visuals, they're very good at complimenting your speech, and they're not too busy
- Your voice can get just a little bit monotone at times. This isn't necessarily the worst thing in the world, but it can make some of your lines fall just a bit flat and unengaging.
- You have a lot of time to work with your speech. Just keep working!
- Overall, your speech is written very well and it is very informative. I would just focus on the more technical aspects of your speech (stance, pacing, hand gestures, etc.)

- I find the Enron story to be very interesting, glad to see people talking about it. I think there's a lot of things that people could learn about how financial entities work with this presentation.
- I do like the more conversational tone on such a corporate speech, however I would recommend removing words like "you know" throughout, because another judge may not see that as a part of the speech. Additionally, the structure could get a bit hard to follow from time to time, especially while you're explaining how and why Enron collapsed.
- I think that your props added a lot to the presentation, making an initially complicated topic easy to follow.

- Most of the time when you're standing still you rock back and forth
- ^in addition to that you kinda just leave your right arm standing in mid air and don't really gesture with it, you also mess with your hands a lot
- ^really try hard to break these habits

Don't show on your face if you slip up on something

Try not to stare up at the ceiling or floor.

- I appreciate the slow, deliberate delivery. I could clearly understand everything you were saying; however, at times it was a little too slow and overemphasized.

- watch your hand gestures. They are good, but you tend to bounce and rest them up at your belly button, let them drop at your sides sometimes. It will make them more effective in the long run.

- Your presence is infective. I can tell that you really want to be here. That is something I really look for, so thank you!

- Reason for rank: Other competitors gave a more polished performance with better hand gestures and variance in tone. They also had more deliberate choices when it came to focus and eye contact.

Vocal Qualities

The voice was heard easily and the rate was appropriate

The voice range in terms of pitch, volume speed etc. could have improved to create more interest and impact.

Physical Presentation

There was eye contact throughout

The speaker used varied gestures, was relaxed and expressive.

The speech was well memorized delivered with good flow

Interpretation of Literature

Basic range of emotions in the speech and could have enhanced it more for impact.

Professionalism

The speaker was attentive and courteous throughout.

- Gestures were appropriate, but looked a little stiff at times, work to smooth out
- Work to make better eye contact with everyone in the room, don't let your eyes wonder at times
- You did a great job with delivering this piece, I would maybe suggest moving a little more around the room.
- There were some parts where I felt you could have given it a little more emotion to add to the piece
- I can tell you are passionate about the topic, play it up a little more

Competitor 255 spoke on 'Should Western governments do more to punish Bangladesh's anti-democratic elections?' and placed 4th in the round because structure was clear and presentation easy to follow, however logical points, argument, and presence were not as strong as other competitors.

Comments:

Smart tactic for intro - immediately connecting and making direct application to the listener. Would love a very very clear statement of the question w/ Answer, but gave clear roadmap.

1. Imprisoning People - NYT
2. Dictatorship - NYT
3. Hindering Economic Growth - World Bank, NYT.

Small slip up in first point, but good recovery.

in second point - Some assertions felt stronger than the evidence provided allowed.

Gave solid answer to question in conclusion. Would be great to get a wrap up of the roadmap as part of your conclusion - just to tie everything together.

Gestures were repetitive and presentation needs to have a little more projection. Good effort today! Just going to take some more dedicated practice - but you're building a good foundation.

*The overlapping during the intro is cool, but I feel it could use a little more emotion.

*During the first argument I think Rob could get more worked up as it goes on. Some moments felt a little stagnant.

*Some dialog scenes could use more dramatic pauses. Like having Rob reacts more to her saying "You don't matter to me" before saying "You don't mean that".

*You treated the subject matter with the weight it deserves. This was such a good speech. It was really hard for me when it came to the top 3 ranks.

Performance e was really good. Chemistry was good. Choreography was excellent. There were times when the emotionality wasn't even. Facial expressions from one weren't even between the two of you in emotional moments. While chemistry was good in soft moments, in hard moments it was lacking. Physically, the performance wasn't as sharp as it could have been. This just needs some light cleaning and we'll see you in March.

At the first few words, "When I first saw my..." wouldn't the mother be happy that she just saw her child? You started getting excited when you list the arms, legs, heartbeat.etc but off the start I feel like she'd be excited

The blocking from having the book to then explaining about what is in the book was a little sloppy, you had it then it was open yet it looked like you were holding a child, then you snap back to being at the desk with Debby and it's open like a book, it was just a little weirdly done

I think you do a good job conveying how a mother's emotions would be during a process like this

Watch you diction when you do these breathy lines, you lose some of it with the inhaling and exhaling

When pushing Leo out, you still are able to hit the 2ish jokes in the mix, this is another part I would be aware of your diction on, a majority of it was clear but some words in between the screams were lost

You did a good job portraying the nervousness and uncertainty of a mother giving their child for adoption. You have great clarity and volume in your speech. I could believe your character. I think you made the right choice not being too theatrical because it portrays the humanness of the piece.

I really don't have much critique to give because it was a great performance and all I could recommend would be to polishing it.

Well developed characterization. Animated, comfortable. Play more with the time/speed of speaking. Slower times can be impacted emotionally. Your sadness feels inauthentic and performance similar to the quickly spoken sections. Also smoothen out the bursts of fast speaking because you're losing the value of that dialogue. I love the bold choice to have so many transitions and so many characters, but you need to clear up those transitions with different voices or height or something more concrete than the shoulder adjustment. Excellent work in the emotion of the receiving letter from mom moment at the end. Use that same sadness earlier on.

VOCAL VARIETY & QUALITY: Your volume, rate, and inflection are effective.

PHYSICAL PRESENTATION: Great eye contact. I think your use of the space is effective; it helps maintain audience attention.

MANUSCRIPT: My favorite part involves the librarians for so many reasons. Well done! You have great facial expressions. I found your speech more challenging to follow the pieces/characters than others ranked higher.

INTERPRETATION: At some points, it stays at an intense level for so long. This is impressive for you as the performance, but I think creating those different levels is important.

PROFESSIONALISM: You show poise and confidence. Sometimes your hair covers both your eyes. It is important for us to see your eyes.

Perrin-

Great presentation today. I rated you in the top two of what was one of the most talented rounds I've judged.

You have a very powerful voice and I loved the dancing and jumping around during the presentation. Full of energy, loved the air guitar also.

You brought with you, in a very consistent way, good source and citation of a wide range of anti-LGBTQ legislation around the country to support your theme. Good sources from the Utah Daily, etc.

Strong mix of drama with prose in your piece. This is a very drama heavy program, which I was very drawn into...continue to bring in some balance on the lit side.

Phenomenal eye contact and a wide range of emotions with your character.

I think you come in and out of character very well, and I particularly liked your presentation of the redneck during the piece. I could see the challenges that drag queens face through a number of your characters.

Very strong eye contact, you moved across the audience very well and it was well balanced.

If there was a recommendation it would just be transitions between the different characters you have in this. Each of your characters has a certain aura, and you want to them to be very clear to the audience. With one very dominant character, don't be afraid to bring a few other characters out of the shadows!

Great emotional ending. I really like the letter at the end as well. You have smashed this character out of the park. You lay it all of there.

You are going to continue to do great this year at regional and states!

Loud and clear voice. Good tonal variation. Good gestures even though you were holding a script. Sometimes you speak a bit too fast. I can understand you because your voice is clear, but slowing down will help give me time to digest what you said. The biggest problem is that you have a script- and I know you know that. Once you are memorized, I can see this speech taking off!

The hope speech

Whoah, that start was way louder than I expected. Not in a bad way.

You are really solid with your body movements, that is a very good thing.

Write an actual intro, it is an important part of speeches and just saying the title doesn't help you further the speech.

The only reason I am giving you the 6 is because of the script. The script kills the speech and is fundamentally against the rules. Without it you might have been in my top 2 or 3 in the round but I cannot rank you above anyone without the script so.

You speak really clearly, your gestures are clean and your delivery is one of the best of the round.

A different judge might be annoyed with the getting up on other peoples turns. Instead of getting up, maybe ask what speaker you are.

POSITIVES

You have an amazing RADIO voice!!

your thesis and argument/ support are strong and intellectual/ accurate

You have some very intellectual phrasing, you are super assertive (but your stumbling diminishes the effectiveness)

I am impressed with your persistence and poise to come back from a memory lapse.

THINGS TO IMPROVE

forgot your outline, stumbled on outline to remember first point

your fluidity needs some improvement

RFD stumbles + top speakers had even more developed arguments with more depth

watch some casual phrasing "as NPR puts it"

OUTLINE

MLK 3 day weekend and equality

"not color, but character"

yes,

1) wealth indicator

2) improved equity

3) now increases discrimination

Liar-Liar

Great use of different voices for each character. They were very distinct and easy to tell apart.

After she says "you mean a lawyer"- she takes a drink which is great, but can you do a wince after you drink to make it seem like it is a very strong drink. (At the beginning)

If you are able to time-wise, I think it would be a great idea to include a little introduction in your breakout instead of just the title and author of the piece.

This is very different from the movie and you really made it your own, which is great!

When the secretary is typing, the keyboard should be lower down it is too high up, it is almost next to her face.

"If he can wish it-he can unwish it" -Be more hopeful instead of angry sounding when you say this line.

Great job!

nice articulation and pitch highlights the material being presented. Volume is effective and helps with the flow of the content. nice use of employing voices, to help with shifts in characters, allowing them exist in a distinct way from each other. Gestures and facials expressions, work in coordination with body language to and enhance the material being presented.

Love the lawyer/liar debate LOL

Dad's character is (an) AWFUL (-ly well-presented character) HUMAN! Nice work!

Your volume control is well done!

(I am so drawn into your characters, the plot is a bit muddled for me--perhaps some help in the intro would be good for when judges are evaluating. I missed a minor character early on...)

His lying outbursts are hysterical! LOL

It is obvious you are enjoying your own performance! NICE!

I hope you can land in the top 3--I really enjoyed this and your performance!

See what you can do to polish some of your transitions and nuances of your character's behaviors.
