I gave you the ranking of 6 because you need to:

Take a deep breath! You can do this. Nerves were very well noted. The first presentation is always the hardest! It will get easier :)

Introduction was very rushed and hard to follow initially - just watch that you don't rush right to topic question and ease into it. This might make it easier for you to keep your thought process in order.

You have good information you presented, it just needs to be formatted better.

Keep practicing! As you keep going and practicing you will find that it is easier to maintain eye contact, control you body language/arm movements, and get into a rhythm that will allow your speaking flow to progress.

More citation resources needed.

Great effort!

Vocal qualities:

- Crisp and clear enunciation and effective variations in rate, volume, and pitch

Physical presentation:

- Excellent eye contact and appropriate gestures

Interpretation:

- I wonder if you can make the humorous parts more, well, natural and conversational, and less "acted," if you know what I mean -- the humorous parts (especially juxtaposed against the serious subject matter) seemed somewhat forced, artificial, and overdone

Professionalism:

- poised, confident, and controlled

- attentive and courteous

Reason for rank: Great job, but the top performer was more polished and natural in expression.

Answer: Yes

Points of analysis: no one is close to trump in the poles, he is flipping dem votes from 2020, republican party considered him to be their nominee

Hi Griffin,

You start off with a great confidence, pace and volume! I like the grade theme as well! Your hand gestures are firm and your eye contact is great as well. That being said, you could do without as many gestures as you do and be very careful of your focal points when you are not making eye contact. You want to be very intentional with your gestures and only use them to enhance your point. You were thinking and pausing pretty frequently and had a few stumbles, which ties into your rank.

Great job overall and keep practicing and perfecting!

Your speech was well organized with many supporting points and stats, however, you went over on time and sped through it. Maybe if you were to lighten the amount of supporting information and dialed in the use of stats, you may not have gone over in time and sped through the speech. While I was able to follow your thoughts, please slow down.

I didn't recall hearing a "hook" in the beginning, but that would have been nice and helpful to engage my interest.

I enjoyed your tone and emphasis on your topic and facts; that helped with my engagement in your topic.

-Strong beginning/opening

-Watch your "um", "so", and "now"

-All of your points were strong. You had endless data to support and your speech was well encompassing.

-With so much data, make sure to summarize at the end of each point. Ex. President made it so protests must be under a union but then restricted union rights. Draw the connections between all the data to relate it to the main point.

-Points were unbalanced in amount of material and caused your final point to be unclear and rushed.

-Make sure to date your sources.

1 @ 9!

Nice start right off the bat, you really did a nice job pulling me in!

I think you did a nice job using humor within the speech to enhance your delivery. Nice Job.

You have very nice gestures, they felt so natural. Small critique: don't be afraid to let your hands just fall at your sides when not gesturing! This wasn't a huge issue just wanted to give you some feedback!

Make sure to hold eye contact for no longer than 3-4 seconds per person, and make sure to utilize the entire audience, not just your judge!

You have very nice vocality. I think you do a nice job emphasizing your point but don't forget that sometimes "quiet moments" can be just as impressive as raising your voice. I.e., the line about Brian turning to drugs/alcohol and getting a divorce could be quieter/slower; this would really make the piece feel even more dynamic and it would be a good place to add more of an emotional feel to the speech.

Great use of the space within the room, I know it was set up weird but you did a nice job with your walking points!

Overall, you did a great job with your performance; just make a few small changes, and you will do great things! Best of luck with the rest of the season!

Points: 1: successful airlines / immigrant friendly 2: well regarded trading nation, 3: treatment towards migrants

Sources: NYT - 23: excellent - valid ,current, & helped prove your point (best airlines award),

Physical (eye contact, use of space, professionalism): Good use of space, hand gestures, eye contact, & facial expressions

Quality (speed, volume, jargon, organization, space usage, tone): Good speed control, nice volume control,organized well, tone changes could use a little work but overall very well done.

Conclusion: Brought it back to the beginning very well. Try revisiting your points in the end.

Your question and answer were clear, but work on building a stronger opening statement. You came up with 3 points supporting your answer. Build on those more to help make your speech longer. Use resources to support the point. (And then cite those resources.)

You have a good voice. Relax and structure your talk around your justification points to make it easier to remember.

Reason for rank: Your speech needs more structure, your points more supporting information, and cited resources. This would also help improve your time.

Penelope--your introduction of 'Baby Mama' is both captivating and moving. I wanted to absorb every second of this DI. It's clear from the first 2 minutes, you are meant to be at the top of the ranks.

The accent you use in the introduction changed a bit (from the ultrasound scene) throughout the speech.

Your eye contact is so strong. Your gestures are the best I've seen today. Your emotions are so appropriate, especially in the 'Leo' scene and the labor scene. Your volume increases appropriately and the emotion radiates.

Your ranking is #2 today. This is solely due to the competition you faced. You are fabulous.

I thought the choice of portraying a woman going through the process of putting their baby up for adoption to be interesting, and the speaker's pacing was well developed.

The speaker did a great job at conveying the inner conflict one might have in this situation.

The speaker conveyed passion, and raw emotion in an incredible way. It was truly impressive to see how vulnerable the speaker was in those moments.

Not to be nit-picky, but I thought the speaker could have had more inflection throughout the less climactic moments of their performance. Intensity is slightly easier to portray than more subtle emotion.

transitions between characters can be cleaner a lot of the piece is at the same level, have some lower moments, and some bigger ones too if you're able to, try to perform without your glasses so they don't slide down your face. if you need them, it isn't a big deal but it could help you focus more on your performance if you can do it without them a very good performance overall, but the one had much more levels in their piece

More confidence. If you sell it well, it's believable.

Good use of your movement and hand motions. I would suggest when you aren't using your hands rest them in front of you. Don't just let them drop so hard. It looks less intentional.

The times you did stumble you just kept going and that's great.

I was a tad skeptical when you started comparing inlaws to immigrants but you tied it together seamlessly throughout.

You had the best presentation, order of arguments, and use of sources in this group of competitors, but you stumbled a bit throughout when thinking what words to use so it was not that fluid at points. Probably with 5 more minutes of prep, it would have been perfect.

I was impressed that you deducted immigration-based crimes from the crime percentage. My mind immediately went there questioning your data, but you plugged that potential argument amazingly. I liked your order of arguments as it put the facts first before the "voters agree" to support the voters' opinions.

Really an amazing job organizing and researching the material.

But no you were hilarious and clean, thats what did it. You also had goo jokes, I took note of the giving birth to a car and "are you still picking uo our son" "IM SUCH AN ASS." But there we many more moments where the audience felt an easy time to laugh along. The vector 4 joke man, you dirty dog. The deep voiced assistant I think was my favorite character.
