This was a very good intro, but you really need to have it memorized. When you're looking down, it takes away from the effectiveness.

You spoke very breathily- you were taking a breath between every other word for a lot of the speech.

Why did you block-walk to a different place- in the middle of a contention. Was this meant to be its own contention? Oh, it wasn't. Don't platform in the middle of a contention, it signals a change of thought.

I thought that you had a very good speech over all. You sounded a little angry, but I thought it worked for your speech. You were angry at the situation, not the chamber.

Overall, nice job. Just a few things keeping you from a 6.

Speech #2 -- Score: 6

I really liked your intro, but make sure you aren't looking down and reading it. It would have been just that much more effective if you had it memorized.

Don't apologize if you make a mistake, just move on. Apologizing brings attention to it.

You had very good contentions- I didn't like your partisan point though. Try and stay away from partisan issues. This is a political category, not a partisan one.

You almost sound a little bit angry, but it fits for your speech.

Overall, nice job. 6- due to a few mistakes and your speech was long.

- I appreciate your more conversational tone. This will go far in debate. It stands out in comparison to the overly assertive tones of others.

- Good job saving emphasis for words that require it instead of using it across all sentences and arguments.

- As a judge who doesn't see the bill, it could be helpful to make more clear how the bill defunds NASA. By the end of your speech, I could understand how the funding would be diverted. Make sure to make it clearer from get-go.

- You got clearly a bit quicker once the PO gave you a tap. Make sure to space out timing evenly throughout speech.

- Good wrap-up conclusory sentence / paragraph

- Don't back-and-fourth question but good job catching yourself

- Don't use debate jargon like "piece of clash." As a former debater I get what you are saying, but given that most of your judges will be layer or at the very least appreciate a debater who talks like a person, try to avoid this jargon. I know it feels good to use in a debate, but using more conversational language in questioning will pay dividends.

Comments on PO-ship:

- I didn't like how you asked Rep. Deivanaathan how to pronounce his last name. Definitely ask to show respect, and I understand that sometimes you will flub. However, you seemed a bit dismissive. You said, "How did you say you'd like your name pronounced?" It implies that he only wants it pronounced not that it is actually how it should be pronounced. I understand you may mess up but def try to be more respectful about it. Didn't come across rude or offensive, but definitely try to make an effort to sound like you care more about pronouncing names correctly.

- I can see your presidency and recency chart. It felt like you were purposefully trying not to call on certain reps (namely, Rep Bish). She stood before other reps on two occasions, but you called on others instead even though they had some precedence and recency.

- Good job keeping questions on time!

- Gonna subtract a point for the snafu with precedence and recency. It was clear he had recently spoke; even I caught on to it. Obviously an honest mistake, but out of fairness to other POs, I am going to subtract a point for the snafu.

You have such a confident and collected speaking style, and I appreciate the lighthearted joke within your intro, it peaked my attention.

You do a great job at keeping eye contact with the audience as well as composure when you talk. However, when you stumbled, you seemed to start over relying on your notepad, interrupting your flow of speech slightly. This is improved on during your speech though, and you do a great job at adding clash into your speech effortlessly, as you regain control of the room and using the notepad as more of a prop than a crutch, which was wonderful to see.

You could have used a bit more of your time, but I appreciate you finishing your speech collectively and on your own terms over being gaveled down by the chair.

Your contentions are well supported with evidence but I really wish you would have had more impact development. I understand the points that you are making but how will this impact the average American and why should they care about it? That is the question that you need to answer every speech you write.

Your speaking style is okay, but comes off as a little monotone, you would greatly benefit from more dramatic emphasis on the right terms, more rise and fall, as well as more variation in both tone and volume.

The Star Trek intro is so nerdy and topical, the delivery of it was well done too, nice job.

Your contentions were well supported with evidence and you also mitigate a lot of the negative impact that rehash would have on your speech by including lots of very effective clash. You also had pretty good impact development, some more local impact would have been nice, but you still did well. I also really like the emotional emphasis you put on lots of terms throughout your speech, the pathos is huge.

I like your speaking style, but you would benefit from having more of everything that you are currently doing. More rise and fall, more of that emphasis, and more variation in your tone and volume.

Being the 6th speaker of the session to use the Titan submersible as an intro is really unfortunate, you have to be able to lose this intro and think on your feet to come up with something new and unique.

The contentions you give are well supported with evidence, but yet again you are discussing the regulations of the Titan submersible which has been rehashed into oblivion at this point. Your emotional appeal in the 1st contention is well done and effective. I really wish that you had more clash, but that the clash that you did have was very well done and effective.

Your contentions are okay and you used plenty of evidence to support it, my biggest problem is the amount of rehash that you have. Your first contention is a point that has already been brought up and refuted by the opposition. I appreciate that you tried to take a different angle on the issue, but this late into the round I really need you to either have entirely unique points or effectively refute the points of the opposition. Your second contention suffers from a similar problem.

Your contentions are well supported with evidence and in particular I like your first contention because it stays unique this late into the round. Your second contention comes off as weak given how popularity compares to other contentions that have been made this session, it also suffers from rehash and the refutation of said rehash. Good job during your P.O.ship, however I think you needed to take control of the room when the break was being motioned for. Someone objected to the motion, and you allowed plentiful banter to occur before offering a vote - which ultimately was never offered - and even after representative Little voiced his grievances further, a vote was never conducted, resulting in him rescinding his motion entirely.

While it is tempting to let the room make the decision, you should have followed procedure and allowed them to vote, even if you felt that you knew which way the vote was going to go so that it could be said that he fairly lost the opportunity to speak.
